Why this car.

The Huracán EVO RWD is the rear-wheel-drive variant of the EVO restyling. Roughly 30% of EVO production left Sant'Agata in this configuration. It loses 0.4 seconds to 100 km/h against the AWD version because there is less grip off the line. It then gains that time back — and more — between 100 and 200 km/h, because there is roughly 33 fewer kilograms of car to push and the rear differential is single-purpose rather than torque-vectoring.

This is not the easier car to drive. It is the more interesting one.

The specific car presented here was bought new from the official Lamborghini dealer. The configuration is the maximum factory specification: full Style Pack, Forged Narvi wheels with titanium bolts, Carbon-Ceramic brakes, MagneRide adaptive suspension, factory titanium Performante exhaust, Forged Composites carbon interior, alcantara headliner, carbon bucket seats. The protective film coverage is whole-body and includes the windshield.

Mileage at 9,000 kilometers is approximately 1,800 km per year over four years — five times below the global average for the model. Recent service completed; service history available on request.

The asking price sits on the higher end of the global open-market range for a 2021 EVO RWD with this mileage. The configuration explains the rest.
